The Bristol Courier says: Hill knew it was loaded, but faced it as a matter of party duty. Though he went down in defeat, he is still a hero.

Grand old Mississippi can look the Democratic party squarely in the face and say: "Shake not thy gory locks at me, thou canst not say I did it."

Laudelides, Waterloos, Tidal Waves, Cyclones, are words which the Obion Democrat thinks should be strictly prohibited for the next two years at least.

The scalping knife and battle axe will now be relegated into "innocuous desuetude" and the Democratic party go forward to repair the rents that befell it on the 6th inst.

This issue of the TIMES is worth to each subscriber the subscription price for the remainder of their natural lives; if they will burn into their minds the facts it contains, and will act in accordance with their true interests as set forth in these columns. It wants your support and influence to increase its subscription list, not alone for the money it will bring its proprietors, most of which, or possibly all, will be spent in increasing its size, influence and usefulness which you will share, but for the great good a live, fearless paper will have upon all classes and business, which will redound to the general welfare. Help us and we will help you.

We think the Populite element in the South will find the best of their doctrines more speedily realized through the conservative element of the Democracy than by a separate organization. We think it was an error to separate from it; better have remained in the party and fought for the right and helped to control its policy in the interests of the common people. Better return boys and help fight the forces against the great mass of our people. You can never carry out your financial schemes. The money power is too powerful, and well entrenched, and the commercial world and conservative thinkers are all against you. A wise man changes his mind without fear.

The overwhelming defeat of the Democracy in the recent general election is due to three prime causes: First, the division and wrangling of the party representatives at Washington; secondly, the general depression which had set in under the Republican administration and culminating now. The people always hold the ruling party responsible, whether justly or not, for any great depression, and any party would have fared as the democracy under similar conditions. The third cause we believe to be the free silver attitude of the possible majority of the party which alarmed the money power and conservative people everywhere. This is evidenced by the election being in favor of the Republicans, who have always been sound on the finances, instead of the Populists or any other element in favor of wild and erroneous ideas of the money question. The principles and tendencies of the conservative portion of the Democracy are founded in right and are the true policy for the poor farmer. The transfer of popular favor from the Republicans to the Democracy, and now back again to them, shows how in their avarice they are seeking for the unattainable in material benefits from legislation and how ephemeral is popular favor. This is cause for reflection to thoughtful and conservative men, and calls for their influence in shaping public sentiment in safe channels, and should be a warning to mercenary politicians that they had better seek safer avocations. It seems to be a very general idea that Cleveland is responsible for the defeat, especially in New York. While it is possible for us to be mistaken, yet we believe he is one of the ablest, purest, and nearest to the true interest of our whole people, of any occupant of his position, in the history of our country, and that when the passions and prejudices of the people have abated, time will so record its verdict.

He is charged with treachery in New York. If the above estimate of his character be true it were impossible for him to indorse a cold-blooded and unscrupulous politician such as David B. Hill, or any organization like Tammany reeking with corruption. He would have to stultify himself to do so, and it were better in the interest of pure government for his party to be defeated, and especially for its future best interests, if it exterminated forever this hideous ulcer. Let us not lose faith in the truth and justness of our causes, but buckle on our armor for a renewed fight and hope that, "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again; The eternal years of God are hers. But error, wounded, writhes in pain, And dies among his worshippers."

W. C. Whitney's Opinion.

In the New York World, replying to a request for his opinion as to the causes of the Democratic defeat, Mr. Whitney says:

It does not require a seer to see that the cause of yesterday's results were both general and special. It is a repetition, to my mind, of 1874, with the parties reversed. The panic of 1873 resulted in the great Democratic tidal wave of 1874, and the hard times of 1893 and 1894 have resulted in this great Republican victory.

That is the great underlying general cause, but along with it is the fact that the Democratic party has misbehaved since 1892, and disgusted large bodies of its friends and supporters. That fact has been perfectly evident to every body. When people are poor and hungry they actually are against the government, and the party in power gets the blame of it.

A great many who have loyally supported the party this time will rather rejoice at the thoroughness and completeness of the whipping. If it was to be, they would rather have the lesson written out strong enough not to be mistaken. I do not think it is a verdict against the party or its principles. The Republicans will say so, and it will take a long time to get over it, but the Democratic party has had four times as many defeats as victories since I have been a voter, and it does not demoralize easily. It will be stronger in the end.

What Shall we Farmers do to be Saved?

EDITOR TIMES:—You did not apprehend the bearings or queries lately published in your paper. It goes without saying that for years the farmers, with very few exceptions, have been losing ground. They are gravely told by those that do not farm that in order to prosper, they must plant less cotton and raise everything that is consumed at home—especially corn and meat—and they are cited to Mr. A. or Mr. B. who always has corn in his crib, and meat in his smoke-house, and is making money. They are not cited to the nine who succeed in making corn and meat, yet make no money; nor to the ninety and nine who struggle year after year to grow these products and fail. An investigation would show that Mr. A's soil is of character to grow corn with a margin of profit, and his "range" advantages enable him to raise meat at small cost. That the nine raise these products with no margin of profit; while the ninety-nine simply battle against fate. The truth is, this is not a corn country. The average yield per acre will not exceed ten bushels—value $35.00 (it is selling today at forty cents) hardly covering cost of production—to say nothing of rent, interest, taxes, wear and tear. If corn cannot be grown profitably there is no probability that meat can be. Besides how many farmers have any skill in breeding or feeding? Some—aad too many—will keep a lot of hogs in a small enclosure till fall, then turn them out to forage on neighbors (of course abusing every one that objects) but the profit is not legitimate or just.

Land that will produce (under the ordinary management) ten bushels of corn per acre, will yield one-half bushel of cotton, worth four cents, together with the seed, about $11.50, with the advantage of always finding a prompt cash market. The cost, of course, is greater than in the case of corn, but the value at present is abnormally low or the balance would be more decidedly in favor of the staple.

Oats and other crops might be mentioned in the comparison, but these are not generally grown and probably the subject is not of sufficient interest to readers to justify further trespass on your time and space.

"Early in the Winter, I took a severe cold which developed into an obstinate, hacking cough, very painful to endure and troubling me day and night, for nine weeks, in spite of numerous remedies. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral being recommended me, I began to take it, and inside of 24 hours, I was relieved of the tickling in my throat. Before I finished the bottle, my cough was nearly gone. I cannot speak too highly of its excellence."—Mrs. E. Bosch, Eaton, Ohio.
